The Indian Law Reporter (ILR) is a publication of the American Indian Lawyer Training Program. While each volume has its own subject index, the publisher does not provide a cumulative index to all of the volumes. Because it is cumbersome to search each year's index separately, the National Indian Law Library (NILL) created this cumulative index of only the tribal court opinions for all volumes ...

If the user does not know which volume the decision is located in, or if they are researching by subject, the cumulative subject index will give the user the page and volume number of each decision. Once the user knows the volume number that is needed he/she clicks on the folder dedicated to that volume number to unzip the file.
