Bernard Beckett has both, and Genesis has succeeded in completely blowing my mind. It's a book you need to read to fully understand, as I don't think any review can explain what awaits you on the pages. It covers every aspect of humanity, in particular war, power, and evolution, and raises so many questions that I think a second read is in ...

Genesis (novel) - Wikipedia
Theme Question: What does it mean to be human? What makes you human? This is something Bernard Beckett explores in Genesis. One way he does this by presenting us with Adam Forde. Adam is the what we would call the ideal humanist, which was something our friend E.M Forster knew a bit about. However, unlike The Machine Stops, which shows the demise of humanity in a way that reflects Kuno's ...

From the Reviews: "Her interview, all five hours of it, makes up the entirety of Genesis, a daring formal experiment that may not always work dramatically, but has a palate-cleansing purity unusual in most young adult fiction. (...) Beckett has written a very different young adult novel -- assured, cool, almost cold -- that will make smart teenagers feel very respected."

Genesis - Bernard Beckett - Complete Review
Overall, an absorbing, not-light, original, complex, fascinating, and emotionally engaging novel, written by a scientist who is clearly a passionate person who cares deeply about the dilemmas humanity faces. If you can appreciate a very unique story-telling style and unique imagining of the future you will enjoy "Genesis".
