History Paper Conclusion

Introduction and Conclusion. INTRODUCTIONS. The introduction of a paper must introduce its thesis and not just its topic. Readers will lose some—if not much—of what the paper says if the introduction does not prepare them for what is coming (and tell them what to look for and how to evaluate it). For example, an introduction that says, "The British army fought in the battle of Saratoga" gives the reader virtually no guidance about the paper's thesis (i.e., what the paper concludes ...

Formulating a Conclusion. A conclusion offers the final word on a paper: the insight you hope to have imparted to your reader, your paper's moral or lesson. As such, it is important that your conclusion do more than merely summarize the contents of your paper. Too often, a student begins the last paragraph of a paper with the words, "In conclusion..." then re-caps the contents of the entire essay, point for point, and simply leaves it at that.

Formulating a Conclusion

Evidently, a typical history essay format requires the writer to provide background on the event or person, examine major influences, and discuss the importance of the forces both then and now.
